Dear Mr. Scheibeler,

In response to your request regarding my income from Amway/Quixtar, it should be noted that it has been ALL red ink. My average tax loss has been $8,000 per year for 1995-1999. The money I spent which was not deductible would at least double the loss. The biggest loss was, however, in all the J and I put into the business. As you well know, we spent a lot of time trying to “follow the system” – books, tape programs, attending seminars and meetings, etc.

My main complaint is with the support system. The bottom line is they do NOT deliver anything close to which is promised and suggested. I always looked past the support system to the actual Amway/Quixtar business, as I believed that was where the big money was coming from. I never had a problem with the up-line making money from the support system, but if that is the majority of their income, then the whole support system is a fraud. Duplication is the center piece of their entire promotion-and the support system can not be duplicated.

As you know, I had a cult-type experience in the early 1970's. While I am not an expert and can not say for sure that this support system is a cult, I can say that “from forty yards away, it sure looks like one.”

Sincerely,

R.T.M.(CPA)
